Displaced family farmer from Curvarado, Urabá

“We were really happy on our farm--it was thriving. In 1997, they murdered my two sons and I fled with my wife and children. They stole everything so that they could plant oil palm. Now I am trying to reclaim my land. There are huge threats against my life every single day, but I will never let them displace me again from here. As a small scale farmer, I have no choice--without my land, I am nothing...nothing.”
